ABOUT GUSSOW

Gussow 2026 - Cracking the Cretaceous Code: Unlocking the Strata of the Western Canada Sedimentary Basin

Gussow 2026 brings geoscientists together to explore the Cretaceous, one of the most prolific and economically significant intervals of the Western Canada Sedimentary Basin. This focused, single-track technical conference highlights current research, emerging interpretations, and practical insights shaping exploration and development across Cretaceous systems.

Spanning marginal marine to nonmarine depositional environments, the Cretaceous hosts many of the basin's most important reservoirs. Gussow 2026 emphasizes an integrated, reservoir-scale understanding of these systems, drawing on stratigraphy, sedimentology, basin structure, and subsurface data to better inform exploration strategies and development outcomes.

Unlike conferences that prioritize breadth, Gussow delivers depth. Its single-track format ensures a shared experience where every attendee engages with the same technical content, fostering meaningful discussion, collaboration, and knowledge exchange across disciplines.

Gussow 2026 will provide attendees with exceptional opportunities to learn from and connect with a like-minded community of geoscientists from industry, academia, and government, all set within the inspiring backdrop of Banff National Park.
